White balance. Unsurprisingly the EOS 300D's white balance performance was identical to the EOS 10D. That is that we were disappointed to see the camera's automatic white balance perform so badly under incandescent light, I would have expected Canon to have solved this by now (as I commented in my EOS 10D review HP seem to have almost perfect auto white balance in any light).

By default, your Rebel T1i is set up to use the Auto White Balance feature, which uses complex algorithms to analyze the color in your scene to determine what's what and then calibrates itself to those white values. This is the only white balance option that's available in Full Auto mode, but in Program mode, you can override the Auto White Balance and opt for some more manual control.
